

Word of the Editor-in-Chief

As we are celebrating the 30th anniversary of our journal's publication in the field of oncology, it is with great pride and enthusiasm that I am announcing this special jubilee issue. Over the past three decades, we have witnessed remarkable advances in the understanding, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer. Our commitment to disseminating high-quality, peer-reviewed research has played an important role in advancing oncological expertise throughout the academic society. During these 30 years, our journal has been a platform for researchers, clinicians, and scientists to share their insights, discoveries, and innovations. With a novel Editorial Team, we look forward to the future with a renewed sense of purpose and determination. Together, we will continue to contribute to the expansion of knowledge in various aspects of cancer, thus impacting the improvement of the lives of those affected by this challenging disease. It is with gratitude that we acknowledge the authors, reviewers, and readers who have followed and still accompany us on this remarkable journey. Thank you for your continuous support and for being an integral part of our publishing community.

Kind regards,
